

Syracuse University

Remarks by Chancellor Kent Syverud

Delivered on March 21, 2017

Location: Hendricks's Chapel

Remarks: Service of Commemoration

Good afternoon. In a moment, I will read the names of the faculty and staff who have passed away in the last year. First, however, let me thank you for being here, for coming together as a community for this inaugural Service of Commemoration.

With more than 20,000 students, 5,000 faculty and staff, and thousands of friends, it is inevitable that Syracuse University will lose beloved members of our community each year.

Today is the first of what I hope will be an annual commemoration of those who were part of our community. Each of those we remember made a difference at Syracuse University, and we celebrate them.

Hendricks Chapel has played a role throughout its history in bringing together and unifying diverse peoples. Though the University was founded by, and remains affiliated with, the Methodist Episcopal Church, Hendricks Chapel opened its doors in 1930 as a home for all faiths.

More than 80 years ago, Hendricks Chapel's inaugural dean, William H. Powers, declared Hendricks to be "a place where all unite, regardless of our religious creeds. This is the place where we try to find something in common—one for all, and all for each."

Today, we are united in our shared loss and our shared determination to remember. We gather, not just to recall names and faces, but to embrace the legacies of our loved ones. All of us are here today to build upon their strengths, to remember dreams, and to ensure that their lives can still inspire the lives of others.

This University learned how to remember lost souls after the horrific terrorist bombing of Pan Am Flight 103. We learned how to act forward in their memory, when we established the Remembrance and Lockerbie scholarships. And in return, those scholarship recipients fulfill the hopes and dreams of those who lost their lives too soon.

Through that tragic experience, this University learned not only how to endure But how to look back and act forward.

We are doing that again today, once again in this great chapel.

Some of those we honor today lived long, fulfilling lives, and made major contributions to their fields of study or to their communities.

Others had their lives cut short by illness or tragedy. And though their time with us was too brief, their contributions still were meaningful and important.

I have not the slightest doubt that, for each name I read today, there were countless acts of decency, kindness, and hard work on behalf of our students, our community, and our university. No doubt some of those kindnesses are forgotten. But the Bible says not a sparrow falls without God knowing it. Today we try to remember not just the falling, but also the kindnesses and blessings.

In the Jewish tradition, there is a phrase often seen in obituaries: “May their memory be for a blessing.”

We are blessed today with the memory of the following faculty and staff who passed away during the year behind:

Robert J. Bartels
Karl Barth
Bahri Behrami
Jose Benardete
Frederick A. Bobenhausen
Francis M. Borasky
Amanda Wiles Brown
Marilyn J. Butler
Bettye Caldwell
Sandra J. Chase
Patricia C. Colucci
Jennifer M. Cook
Frederick Cooter
Pedro Cuperman
David J. deLaubenfels
Burton E. Eseltine
Donald F. Everson
Joan Idella Farmer
Frances Felton
H. Kenneth Fitzgerald
Brenda L. Fuller
Cindy D. Gromny
T. William Hall
Arlene J. Hanlin
Laurel Holben
Keyran Joseph Hooley III
Peter E. Howe
Lewis L. Howland
Sonia Mae Johns
Linda Louise Kalbus
Marilyn Kerr
David R. Krathwohl
Rosemary L. Lape

Judith Ellen Meighan
Margaret Kearney Melnick
Arlene J. Michelson
Metod] M. Milac
Martha Mirabella
David Olson
Ellen Oppler
Maria Orendarenko
Julia Evelyn Osborne
Helen Palmer
Charles L. Petersen
John Alan Robinson
Claire S. Rudolph
Lorraine A. Schmidt
Teresa I. Sheehan
Peter G. Simpkins
Huston Smith
James M. Thompson
Rosalyn E. Trotman
Mark Frederick Weimer
Stuart C. Williams

Gary Engelhardt will now light the candles in memory of faculty. Louise Ciaramella will light the candle in memory of staff.

####